AN IRISH POET.

MILES O'REILLY, a private in the N. Y. 47th, engaged in the siege of Charleston, recently wrote a poem in which he ridiculed the views of Admiral Duane. He was put under arrest for disrespect to his superior, when he addressed a poetic petition to the Secretary of War, of which the following is the conclusion:

"O! Stanton, our great 'god' o' war!"

"My condition is pitiful, see."

"And I'm bound to be milted to melt."

"Let your head be milted to melt,

"For I come of the decentest people."

"In the beautiful town of Thrasher,

"Where praties an' whiskey is plenty,

"An' civil reely is the poorest martial we have

"There at all, though we have the 'peeler,'

"—Is 'e to 'em?—who are worse, if such a this war be?"

"As I am bound to melt,

"To melt like the gold and Anne."

"A type of the oaken time!"

"God is good to you, Mother Stanton,

"An' I am kindly on me case,"

"An' I am bound to melt,

"To melt like the gold and Anne."

"A type of the oaken time!"

"If he melt, as in oaken time—"

"If he melt, as in oaken
